Re: Resuming operations at PortMiami

Mr. Del Rio:

The Florida Department of Health (the "Department") understands that the resumption of your operations may be contingent upon the Department's input. The Department's powers and duties regarding the control of communicable diseases, illnesses, and hazards to health among humans in the state are codified in section 381.0011, Florida Statutes. The Department has limited statutory authority with respect to cruise lines, and the Department's permission is not required for your company to resume operations.

As you know, the State of Florida is in active litigation in the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Florida regarding the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention ("CDC") Conditional Sailing Order. There is a likelihood that such order exceeds the CDC's statutory authority, especially considering it requires, absent congressional direction, a state health agency to contract with private entities. To the extent such order is upheld as lawful and necessary, this letter satisfies the requirement that your company receive approval from the Department.

To be clear, nothing in state law stands in the way of cruise ship operations. The Department has been engaged with your industry in order to provide support and advice since a Public Health Emergency was declared in Florida. Each of our counties with ports and the Department as a whole remain committed to assisting and advising on best public health practices to support you in ensuring the safety of crewmembers, guests, and port employees as you resume operations. The Department is in full support of your company resuming operations and we look forward to continuing this collaborative relationship when your company begins sailing again.

Sincerely,

Scott A. Rivkees, MD
State Surgeon General
